Development. The present invention relates to pharmaceutical compositions for the treatment of patients with asthma. In particular, the invention relates to a sprayable pharmaceutical composition for the inhalation of patients with asthma. The term “asthma” describes a condition of inflammation of the mucosa of the respiratory tract which can be defined by the physiological consequences: bronchospasm and recurrent attacks of breathlessness caused by a narrowing of the airways as a result of contraction of smooth muscle fibres present in the airway walls.
Asthma is a chronic condition, the symptoms of which can be relieved by the administration of bronchodilators.
However, these drugs have side effects in the form of anxiety and tremor which can make administration difficult to patients. The condition usually requires daily administration of drugs for prolonged periods of time.
The disease is highly prevalent, particularly among children, affecting up to 10% of school children in some countries. The inhalation of bronchodilators to treat asthma has been practiced for many years. The first bronchodilators were aerosol solutions of dichloro-
